AppWorks Platform (Process Suite Platform) - 25.1	Software Test Automation Framework - V3.3.0	Common Public License 1.0	Yes	- License marked as redistributable - Component has been reviewed - Project is marked for External distribution	- No modifications	- Attribution(notice)	Legal Comment: The CPL OSS license is a "weak copy-left" OSS license, very similar to EPL. The weak-copy left is only triggered if we modify the code and our code is statically linking the CPL software . So, there are two conditions needed to trigger the share-and-share-alike/copy-left requirement, OSS modification and static linking. As long as we don't modify the CPL source code AND statically link to our code, there's no copy-left concern. It is also recommended to upgrade the CPL license to the (newer) EPL license, which has the less broad patent shield language. To perform this upgrade, it should be sufficient to change a readme file that lists the 3rd party OSS components and the applicable licenses and replace CPL 1.0 with EPL. This type of upgrade from CPL to EPL is explicitly permitted in EPL

AppWorks Platform (Process Suite Platform) - 25.1	WSDL4J - 1.6.3	Common Public License 1.0	Yes	- License marked as redistributable - Component has been reviewed - Project is marked for External distribution	- No modifications	- Attribution(notice)	Legal Comment: The CPL OSS license is a "weak copy-left" OSS license, very similar to EPL. The weak-copy left is only triggered if we modify the code and our code is statically linking the CPL software . So, there are two conditions needed to trigger the share-and-share-alike/ copy-left requirement, OSS modification and static linking. As long as we don't modify the CPL source code AND statically link to our code, there's no copy-left concern. It is also recommended to upgrade the CPL license to the (newer) EPL license, which has the less broad patent shield language. To perform this upgrade, it should be sufficient to change a readme file that lists the 3rd party OSS components and the applicable licenses and replace CPL 1.0 with EPL. This type of upgrade from CPL to EPL is explicitly permitted in EPL

Notes:

Redistributable

This column indicates whether or not you can redistribute the listed open-source component or technology in commercial-of-the-shelf (COTS) products under the OpenText open-source usage policies. The product cannot be publicly released until all cells in this column display "Yes".

Yes – The redistribution of this component is allowed with the condition of full compliance with the listed open–source license obligations and restrictions.

No - Redistribution is prohibited. See the Redistributable Reason column for details and instructions.

Restrictions

This column indicates the usage restrictions imposed by the open-source license and/or by OpenText open-source usage policies. The product cannot be publicly released if any of these restrictions are violated.

No modifications – You are not allowed to modify this component, you must redistribute it "as is". Modifications would trigger share-alike obligations under the open-source license and are prohibited by the OpenText open-source usage policies.

No static linking – You cannot statically link this component into the product, you must use dynamic linking. Static linking would trigger share-alike obligations under the open-source license and is prohibited by the OpenText open-source usage policies. What exactly constitutes "static linking" or "dynamic linking" varies based on the programming language used. Dynamic linking here refers to any method of integrating the open-source component with the OpenText product, which permits the customer to modify and replace the open-source component without having access to the OpenText source tree and build scripts. Conversely, static linking is any integration method which prevents such modifications or replacements.

No derived work – Additional usage conditions – other than modification or static linking - may trigger share-alike obligations. Determining what constitutes "derived work" can be difficult and controversial. Because of this all forms of usage may be prohibited by the OpenText open-source usage policies. See the Comments section for details.

Obligations

This column lists your obligations arising from the open-source license and the OpenText open-source usage policies. Full compliance with all obligations is required before releasing the product.

Attribution – You must disclose the inclusion of the open-source technology in the copyright notice included with the OpenText product, indicating the name of the open-source component or technology, its version and the name of the open-source license it is distributed under.

Redistribute license text – You must include the full, unmodified license text with the product.

Redistribute source code – You must provide free of charge, when requested by OpenText customers, the full source code of the included open-source component. You must obtain the correct version of the full open-source s, including all build scripts and test harnesses, you must put it under OpenText source control and place it in escrow.

Share-alike derived work – It requires OpenText to publicly release proprietary source code under the same open-source license. This obligation will be triggered if one or more of the restrictions listed are violated. Determining the precise scope of "derived work" can be difficult and may be controversial. It may include up to the full source tree of the product, all required build scripts, all test harnesses, and all internal documentation. Similar obligations may be passed on to our customers and partners. Distributing under the share-alike obligation is prohibited by the current OpenText open-source usage policies. See the Comments section for details.
